Venue: Gallery-2

No.of students attended: 15

Faculty: Dr.Girish Kumar, Associate Professor

Date: 25/03/19

Phone no.8374354444

Summary:

Minimal intervention Dentistry is a traditional, surgical manner of managing dental caries. It is proposed by G.V.Black. The teeth are supposed to be kept functional for life. It is compulsory for the students to know about these procedures to manage a patient in the clinic. They have to be aware of these treatment protocols to minimize the pain and also to ensure a proper way of treatment.

SEMINAR ON DEEP CARIES MANAGEMENT

Venue: Lecture Gallery-1

No.of students attended: 15

Faculty: Dr.Krishna Mohan, Associate Professor

Date:12/2/19

Phone no.9347482779

Summary:

The practitioner faces a substantial problem when treating deep carious lesions that are getting close to a healthy pulp. In order to stop additional cariogenic activity and provide a well-mineralized base of dentin for restoration, the traditional care of carious lesions of any form requires the removal of all infected and damaged dentin. However, when the technique runs the danger of breaching or even exposing the pulp, the course of treatment becomes less predictable and may call for procedures like pulpotomy, pulpectomy, or indirect pulp capping (usually employing a protective material like a calcium hydroxide-based preparation). Both the dentist and the patient, who is informed of the dangers and asked to participate in the choice, may find it difficult to choose between these possibilities.

WORKSHOP ON RCT INSTRUMENTATION

Venue: DEPT OF ENDODONTICS

No.of students attended: 15

Faculty: Dr.Sreeha, Associate Professor

Date: 17/1/19

Phone no.9010477996

Summary:

Lack of understanding of the morphological and anatomical nuances of the root canal system may lead to improper instrumentation and, as a result, treatment failure. In order to get rid of the germs inside the canals, irrigation and root canal therapy are also crucial. The obturation stage of endodontic treatment, which closes all potential spaces in the radicular system, is another crucial step.

Professionals must be aware of all new rotatory instrument possibilities that can enhance instrumentation findings.

Number of students attended: 18

Phone no.9283241104

SUMMARY:

Industry partnerships have drawn more attention in management theory and practise. This trend is made more pronounced by the necessity for innovation in the current corporate climate and the desire of policymakers to monetize scholarly information. However, despite the fact that significant study has gone into identifying the factors that influence interfirm collaboration's success, little is known about industry collaborations. Researchers have put a lot of work into identifying the factors that contribute to successful corporate collaboration because it has become a problem that is becoming more and more significant over the years. The collaboration between industry and academics is a new kind of partnership with potentially different success factors. these participants have various goals and are subject to various limitations.
